The Sun's New Sunday Magazine

FFERS and will offer you week after week more valuable information on vital topics of the time and more genuine entertainment drawn from the world's lighter interests than you can find anywhere else for your Sunday reading.

Seems a big contract, does it? Then just look over the following—only part of next Sunday's list:

Al Smith Finds That Governors Have No Snaps

He used to wish he could be one, years ago when he was a legislator overworking day and night. He thought it would be easy in comparison. Now he's disillusioned. But then, Al never was a fiend for snaps. The long-distance hard work champion from Oliver street is up against his record test. An intimate study of Gov. Smith in action.

Cradle of Half the Races of Man Found in China

Presumptive ancestors of Caucasians, American Indians, and Polynesians, living as a group of warlike tribes of untamable spirit, have been visited by an American traveller deep in mysterious Tibet under the shadows of the Himalayas. He tells how the Totem Pole came to be and how a Hebrew people got lost in the Far East.

Capt. Bob Bartlett, Who Means to Fly to the Pole

A personal sketch of the greatest adventuring seadog of the Arctic-Peary's navigator and the rescuer of McMillan and Stefansson. Some time next spring he's to "jump off the roof" and attempt with airplanes what Wellman's dirigible failed in. Space for an unknown continent awaits him, unexplored.

Hindenberg and Ludendorff, Hundom's Two Mistakes

Each of these German commanders, able soldier though he was, ignored the United States and other quantities unknown to him in his fatal miscalculations. And so Germany's cause was lost and humanity's was won. This personal account of the two men shows you how and why they failed.

Roosevelt: An Unusual Picture of the Man of Men

It was taken on the crags of the Yosemite. It has perpetuated the characteristics of the great Outdoor Man, but also those of the stanch human rampart who guarded America's liberties. Appropriately it will be published on the day of his countrymen's formal memorial observance.

Judge Gary Discusses Bolshevism's Chance

Explains why he fears no inroad of its contagion among the American people. The eminent steel man, who probably typifies to a Bolshevik all the Red faction denounces, shows in this interview that he understands Bolsheviki and American democracy far better than the Reds understand these things and himself.

New Gas May Enable Dirigibles to Fly Atlantic

Helium, lighter than air but non-inflammable, can be substituted for inflammable hydrogen, thanks to a new discovery. This will revolutionize "blimp" and Zeppelin construction. A full account of the progress that is certain to result.
